

Randall S. James

Randy has lived in Spokane County in Washington State his whole life and is fourth generation Spokane County. He grew up loving the out-of-doors and continues to be an avid hunter, fisherman, backpacker, and camper. Randy's family roots and culture instilled a fierce Conservation Ethic that has continued to grow over his 70 years. Randy has been married to the love of his life for 46 years, has three kids and two absolutely adorable and wonderful twin granddaughters that are five years old. He is currently retired from teaching after teaching science in a high poverty public school for 39 years. Randy absolutely loved his job and feels that he had the best job in the world; educating kids. Always wanting to be a farmer, the closest he has come has been being on the Spokane Conservation District board for the past 24 years. He would tell you that one of the highlights of his life has been watching and helping the Spokane Conservation District family continue to be a conservation leader in putting conservation on the ground. He loves his family, people, the out-of-doors, life-long learning, and Conservation.
